Preface.

IN presenting to the public the Plainfield-Westfield Directory for 1905, I hope I have succeeded in producing as accurate a book of this description as is possible.

I have made a thorough and efficient house-to-house canvass, and no one can appreciate, but by actual experience, the difficulties which constantly arise in procuring the information for a book of this kind.

But by bringing into execution the methods learned by many years' experience, I believe I have reduced the possible errors to the lowest minimum.

Thanking the public and my many patrons for the kind support they have extended to me, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

J. R. WAND.

...and the fact that the police are not always able to help victims of domestic violence. The police are often the first to be contacted by victims of domestic violence, and they are often the first to provide support and advice. However, the police are often overwhelmed by the number of cases, and they are often unable to provide the support and advice that victims need. This is why it is important for victims of domestic violence to seek out other sources of support, such as domestic violence shelters and support groups. These organizations can provide victims with the support and advice that they need, and they can also help victims to access legal services and other resources. In addition, it is important for victims of domestic violence to seek out a therapist who can help them to process their trauma and develop coping strategies. A therapist can also help victims to develop a safety plan and to access other resources that may be available to them. Overall, it is important for victims of domestic violence to seek out support and advice from a variety of sources, and to develop a safety plan that can help them to protect themselves from further violence.

The police are often the first to be contacted by victims of domestic violence, and they are often the first to provide support and advice. However, the police are often overwhelmed by the number of cases, and they are often unable to provide the support and advice that victims need. This is why it is important for victims of domestic violence to seek out other sources of support, such as domestic violence shelters and support groups. These organizations can provide victims with the support and advice that they need, and they can also help victims to access legal services and other resources. In addition, it is important for victims of domestic violence to seek out a therapist who can help them to process their trauma and develop coping strategies. A therapist can also help victims to develop a safety plan and to access other resources that may be available to them. Overall, it is important for victims of domestic violence to seek out support and advice from a variety of sources, and to develop a safety plan that can help them to protect themselves from further violence.
